The rain was sudden and heavy on a cold night over ten years ago. Because of flooding, I was running out of 16 to pick up my then four-year-old daughter from her childcare centre. I struggled through knee-high water in the pouring rain into the shopping centre to buy a cheap plastic raincoat for my 17. When arriving at the day care, although totally wet, I was 18 to be only a few minutes late.

Now I could face the next problem. I had no way of getting home. It was around 6 pm and there were no buses and I couldn't 19 a taxi. Home was too far to walk in the rain with a young child and it was quickly getting 20. We stood outside the childcare centre staring at the rain pouring down, with it showing no sign of 21. Caught up in my thoughts, I just hardly noticed a car stop and a man race inside to 22 his child ten minutes later. I did not recognize him and my thoughts turned back to my own 23.

As if he could not see for himself, I 33 informed him that I was very wet. But he didn't seem to 34, and was simply happy to do us a favor.

To this day, I am still grateful, and I will never 35 the evening that my daughter and I were at a loss but for the kindness of this stranger.

Think fast! Translate this conversation into normal English: "Wass~?" "JC." "G2G. BFN." Confused? The dictionary won't help you. If you figure it out right away, you are probably among the 60% of kids online who use instant messaging, or "IM". Instant messages are typed so fast that users don't slow down to follow normal writing rules. As a result, new short forms of words and emoticons(表情符号) are being invented faster than ever.

An instant-messaging "chat" usually lasts more than half an hour. It is between three or more people and often includes friends from different areas. Nearly half of all online teens believe that the Internet has made their friendships better, according to the Pew Internet and American Life Project. It's a quick, easy way to keep in touch.

Instant messaging is not always a friendship builder. Sometimes, kids use it to air angry or hurt feelings. Such kids aren't necessarily trying to be unkind. Often, it's just easier to say something online than face to face.

Many parents and teachers think kids' instant messaging habits are taking them away from more important things.

Teachers get worried when Internet expressions, such as "u" and "r" and "wuz", show up in kids' writing. Kids' safety is also a concern. Staying connected is fine, but an online friendship with a stranger is not.

Some examples of IM

bfn: bye for now	l8r: later	sry: sorry
brb: be right back	nm: not much	wass~: what's up cu: see you	oic: oh, I see	ur: your g2g: got to go	pos: parents over shoulder	wat: what lol: laugh out loud	rly: really	wuz: was

36. What makes IM different from normal writing?

A. IM is used by all kids.

B. IM doesn't follow normal writing rules.

C. IMs are not words.

D. Users must slow down to type IMs.

37. The message "rly? :-o" most probably means _____.

A. Really? Surprised.

B. What's up? Happy.

C. Really? Sad.

D. What's up? Very happy.

38. Why do teens prefer to chat online?

A. They dislike chatting with friends in the same area.

B. They feel it safer to make friends through IM.

C. They can keep in touch quickly and easily.

D. They try to hurt others' feelings through IM.

39. What is parents and teachers' attitude towards kids' using IM?

A. They support it.

B. They are worried.

C. They don't care.

D. They are not sure.

In 1793, Eli Whitney invented a simple machine that changed America's history: the cotton gin(轧棉机).

Because of Whitney's invention, people could gain more profit from growing cotton. Cotton soon became the most important crop in America's Southern states.

EARLY LIFE

Eli Whitney was born in 1765 in Westboro, Massachusetts. He studied at Yale College (now Yale University).

In 1792, Whitney traveled to the South. While in Georgia, Whitney designed and built a model for the cotton gin.

WHAT DID THE COTTON GIN DO?

Before the cotton gin, cotton seeds had to be picked by hand. This took a great deal of time. Whitney's machine could separate them out very quickly. In fact, Whitney's cotton gin picked more cotton seeds in one day than a person could by hand in a whole year!

The invention of the cotton gin made cotton the most important crop of the American South. Millions of acres of cotton covered Southern fields. In turn, the high demand in cotton tied millions of slave workers to the fields. They picked cotton for the cotton gins.

The price of cotton clothing fell. Cotton cloth could easily be colored in different patterns. Soon, everyone wanted to wear cotton clothes. This encouraged the growth of clothing factories in New England and Great Britain.

43. What was Eli Whitney?

- A. An inventor. B. A teacher. C. A farmer. D. A traveler.

44. What's the advantage of the cotton gin?

- A. Saving life. B. Saving space. C. Saving time. D. Saving cotton.

46. After the invention, millions of slaves were used in the South to _____.

- A. sell clothes B. color cotton cloth C. pick cotton D. produce cotton gins

My daughter is a single parent, who works hard to support herself and her three young sons.

When her eldest son, David, wanted a bicycle so that he could do an after-school job, the family saved up and soon he was the proud owner of a good second-hand bicycle. One afternoon my daughter asked David to go to the local shop to buy some groceries. He rode his bicycle, but foolishly left it outside the shop without putting on the lock. When David came out of the shop, it was gone. He walked home in tears and then, together with his worried mother, went to the local police station to report the theft.

Imagine their joy when they arrived at the police station: a car parked out front had David's bike in the boot(行李箱). The driver told my daughter how he'd seen a group of kids go for the bike once my grandson had gone inside the shop. The driver—in his late teens—had called out to them to leave the bike alone. However, one of the kids in the group had jumped on the bicycle and ridden it away while the others followed.

The teen got in his car, drove after them and demanded the stolen bike back. He was happy to be able to return it to my grandson together with a lecture about the foolishness of failing to use the bike lock. Then, in all the excitement, he drove away quietly, without even giving his name or telephone number.

47. What is the life of the author's daughter like?

- A. Rich. B. Foolish. C. Dangerous. D. Hard.

48. David wanted a bike to _____.

- A. go to school B. go shopping

49. The underlined words "The teen" in the last paragraph refer to _____.

- A. David B. the daughter C. the car driver D. the shop owner

50. Where did David find his bike?

- A. At the shop. B. At the school gate.
C. At home. D. At the police station.

How to Prevent Dehydration(脱水)

When the weather's warm, you need to make sure you drink enough water. But did you know that you lose your sense of thirst as you get older? This means you're more likely to suffer from dehydration, which may lead to falls, diseases and confusion.

A study in the UK has shown that drivers who had only a very small amount of water an hour made twice as many mistakes as drivers who drank enough water.

So how do you know when your body is in need of water? Warning signs include:

- Feeling tired
- Dry mouth and dry skin
- Reduced concentration
- Headache.

But you might not notice any signs at all, so to prevent dehydration:

- Keep a glass of water by your side when you're at home, and drink from it regularly.
- Take a small bottle of water with you when you go out.
- Always drink a large glass of water with a meal.
- Eat fruit and vegetables with high water content.
